Over the course of three decades, the Fairleigh Dickinson University Press Poetry Series published over 100 volumes of poetry, encompassing both established and emerging voices from the Italian literary scene. By providing English translations of these works, the series not only made them accessible to a wider readership but also fostered a deeper understanding of Italian culture and its literary heritage.

The series' rigorous editorial standards ensured that the translations retained the essence and integrity of the original Italian poems, while also making them accessible to non-Italian speakers.
